

WORK OF UNIVERSITY OF UTAH TRAINING SCHOOL TO BE SHOWN AT WORLD'S FAIR

DRAMATIZING GREEK LIFE

One of the interesting exhibits of the school work that will be given a place in the Utah building at the World's Fair will be that of the Training School of the University of Utah. Specimens of basket weaving, pottery, clothing, physics apparatus, designs in clay, articles woven by kindergarten children and numerous charts descriptive of Utah resources will compose the exhibit.

One of the most valuable pieces will be the various parts of a large rug that is being constructed by the pupils of the fourth and fifth grades. The figures are all conventional, representing the sego lily, grasshoppers, sea-gulls, houses and the spokes of a wheel in the pioneer's prairie large spinning wheel. Clothing made

MINE TO BE REPRESENTED.

Another attraction will be a paper mache representation of a mine at Park City, made by fourth grade children and showing the source of the ore and the carriages and cars taking it to the smelter. This is all made by the hands of children, the mine shaft, the trestle work used for the carriages and the melting plant in the distance.

From the manual training department will be sent specimens of woodwork, carving and cabinets and a wheel in the pioneer's prairie large spinning wheel. Clothing made by third and fourth grade pupils and fire station containing beds, hose, complete dress, with skirt and waist, made by a fourth grade school girl, and all the implements of a fire department will also be sent by the members of the kindergarten class. This work is all done by children between three and five years old. Carpets have been woven by them for the rooms and everything arranged by baby hands.

From the beginners class, which is the next grade, will be sent small carpets, towels and matting that has been woven by them. They will also send a number of charts.

Considerable leather work will be made part of the exhibit. Indian wigwams and Indian cradles, made of the state and seasons. Scrap books representing life in Utah will also be part of their exhibit. A miniature

Whiskey and Beer Habit

PERMANENTLY CURED BY

"ORRINE,"

A SAFE, SURE AND HARMLESS SPECIFIC

Physicians pronounce drunkenness a disease of the nervous system, creating a morbid craving for a stimulant. Continued indulgence in whiskey, beer or wine calls away the stomach lining and stupefies the digestive organs, thus destroying the digestion and ruining the health. No "will power" can heal the inflamed stomach membranes.

"ORRINE" permanently removes the craving for liquor by acting directly on the affected nerves, restoring the stomach and digestive organs to normal conditions, improving the appetite and restoring the health. No sanitarium treatment necessary; "ORRINE" can be taken at your own home without publicity. Can be given secretly if desired.

CURE GUARANTEED OR MONEY REFUNDED.

Mrs. E. W. Wolf, New York City, writes: "ORRINE" cured my husband, who was a steady drunkard for many years. He now has no desire for stimulants, his health is good and his mind is restored to normal. He used only five boxes of "ORRINE."

Mrs. W. L. D. Helena, Minn., writes: "I have waited one year before writing you of the permanent cure of my son. He took sanitarium treatment, as well as other varied cures, but they all failed until we gave him "ORRINE." He is now fully restored to health and has no desire for drink."

Price $1 per box. Mailed in plain, sealed wrapper by Orrine Company, 817 14th St., Washington, D. C. Interesting book—Treatise on Drunkenness, sealed free on request. Sold and recommended by SMITH DRUG COMPANY, Salt Lake City, Utah.

Hunting for Utah's Lost Mine

Exploring Party Now Outfitting in Denver to Prosecute the Search

UTAH'S famous Lost Mine, which has dazzled prospectors in the southwest for nearly a quarter of a century, is the object of an exploring party which is now being outfitting in Denver, and which will start on its adventurous undertaking this spring, says the Denver Republican. Many men have started on the same errand and have never returned from that little known and savage country, where the four corners of Utah, Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona meet. It is a country infested with unfriendly Indians and the white men are quite as apt to be bandits with a price on their heads as to be honest settlers. The story of the Lost Mine is nothing short of a legend in this region and every stranger who comes in is looked upon with suspicion until he has made it clear that the Lost Mine is not the object of his search.

In spite of the dangers of the task, not to speak of the difficulties presented by a wild and inhospitable desert, seemed with deep eagerness and swept by eternal sandstorms, George D. Johnstone and Lyman H. Hays, backed by the Deseret Mining and Exploration company, consisting of several prominent business men of Denver, intend to make a thorough search of the Lost Mine district and are confident that they will solve the mystery which has so long bedeviled the searchers. Mr. Johnstone and Mr. Hays made a preliminary trip to Utah a year ago, remaining several weeks in the Lost Mine country and picking up much information which they believe to be valuable this year. Mr. Hays, who is a resident of Grand Junction, Colo., near the Utah line, is in possession of valuable old documents which he believed to constitute a key to the Lost Mine. Working upon the maps and other documents in his possession the explorers will play before the heart of the wilderness and are more than confident that they will return with a load of ore, some specimens of which were brought out by a half-crazed miner in 1874 and which have since lured more than one miner to his death.

The first the mining world heard of the Lost Mine was in 1878, when a ranchman living on the Roaring Fork of the Grand river, a few miles below where the mining town of Aspen is now situated, was startled by the appearance of a stranger, a tall, gaunt stranger with wide, staring eyes, unkempt hair and beard, emaciated and carrying a bundle upon his back. The stranger began a rambling, incoherent speech in which frequent mention was made of silver, stone buildings, caves, centipedes, lizards and gold. The ranchman gave him food and put him to bed, where he remained the greater part of three days, sleeping most of the time and fractious when awake. On the morning of the fourth day he awoke to consciousness, inquired how he had come to be there, where his horse, guns and prospecting tools were and where his supplies had been put. He told the ranchman that he had found the ruins of an old city while prospecting in Southern Utah and at some distance therefrom was an old stone fort, near which was a silver and gold mine of untold richness. He unrolled his bundle and brought forth about twenty pounds of ore, almost pure silver and gold. He also had a few pieces of rich copper ore. He said there was an abundance of it; that the mines had been worked by some one in past ages and that after selling his ore at Leadville he would return and, with the ranchman, again try to find the mines. The ranchman furnished him with a horse and saddle and the stranger took the trail for Leadville, never to be heard from again. He left the ranchman some of the ore, which is now on exhibition in Denver.

From that time the story of the Lost Mine has become a tradition in Colorado and other western mining states. An expedition was outfitted near Meeker, in Western Colorado, headed by an old hunter and prospector, who had made his headquarters with the Ute Indians. At that time the Lost Mine country was included in the Ute Indian reservation and the prospector informed his party that it would be dangerous to take any man to the mine, which he was confident he could locate from the old stone fort and the ruins of the cliff dwellers attributed to by the mysterious prospector in 1873. The prospector left his companions and went on alone. He had been warned by Indians not to return or his life would be forfeited, but he managed to escape without observation, and returned with two good-sized sacks of ore, which it was estimated ran from 75 to 90 per cent pure silver and carried some gold. The prospector refused to return with his

Would Attend to Perquisites.

(New York Times.)

Representative Champ Clark tells of a western spellbinder who once approached a senator from his state, presenting a demand for recognition, in view of services rendered during a hot presidential campaign. The spellbinder asked his senator if it would not be possible to secure an appointment in the diplomatic service, and he mentioned two or three berths that he thought he could fill. To this the senator demurred.

"I might," said he, "get you an Indian agency."

"What would I have to do?" asked the spellbinder, "and what salary does it fetch?"

"Well," replied the senator, "your duty would be to look after the welfare of Poor Joe, to see that his supplies are properly and honestly delivered to him, and I fancy your salary would approximate $1,500, with perquisites."

"Perquisites?"

"Yes," perquisites. The government contracts for so many head of beef cattle, averaging so many hundred pounds. Now, in delivering these cattle, they are to be counted while being driven into the inclosure. If a yearling should chance to slip in every now and then you're not to raise a fuss about it. So there's no need to tell you just what your perquisites would be. Shall I try to get you an Indian agency?"

"Go, ahead," rejoined the spellbinder, promptly. "I'll take it. Besides, senator, as you see, the deal is suddenly occurring to me that real is a heap sight better than beef for Indians, anyway!"
